Creston Clarke plays at Macanley's in Louisville this week, appearing in "The Last of His Race," "The Lady of Lyons" and "David Garrick." He made a pronounced hit in Lexington Friday night.

***

Three persons were killed and over a score injured in Robinson's opera-house, Cincinnati, during the performance of "Dangers of a Great City" Friday night.

The great central truss of the ceiling crashed down among the audience, and it is a miracle that many more were not killed. Of the many taken to the hospitals, several will die, while others will be crippled or maimed for life. It is quite a coincidence that "The Dangers of a Great City" was being played, and that "Under the Dome" was the next attraction, and superstitious persons will note that the accident occurred on Friday.

NOTICE TO TAX-PAYERS.

Tax receipts for 1897 are now ready and have been for some time. Please call and settle at once and save penalty.

MILITARY POSTS.

Assistant Secretary of War Starts Out on a Tour of Inspection.

He Will Visit Fort Crook and the Military Department of Dakota, Columbia, California and Texas—Col. Robinson Retires—Lieut. Baxter Promoted.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Assistant Secretary of War Meikeljohn left here Thursday night on a tour of inspection of military posts in the west. Since his appointment early in the spring Mr. Meikeljohn has been on duty without intermission at the war department where he has made a most favorable impression by his courtesy and promptness and energy in the dispatch of public business. The assistant secretary goes direct to St. Louis, where he will inspect the post of Jefferson barracks and visit the site for a rifle range for the Jefferson barracks troops and adjacent posts which has been offered for sale to the department. The next stopping place will be Fort Leavenworth, Kas. Mr. Meikeljohn will visit Omaha, where headquarters of the Department of the Platte are located and will fully inspect Fort Crook near that city. Before his return to Washington he expects to visit also the headquarters of the military department of Dakota, Columbia, California and Texas, and such intermediate army posts and stations en route as can be inspected conveniently within the time limited for his trip, it being the purpose of the assistant secretary to familiarize himself as fully as possible with army life, and some of the more important military matters that come before him for official action. Before returning to the war department, Mr. Meikeljohn intends to visit his home in Nebraska for the purpose of attending to some private affairs that demand his consideration and to cast his vote in the coming election in that state.

On the Retired List.

Col. Augustus G. Robinson, assistant quartermaster general, will be placed on the retired list of the army, on his own application, under the 40 years service clause. He is a native of Maine and was graduated at the military academy in 1853. He was transferred from the artillery branch to the quartermaster's department in 1863 and served throughout the war.

His retirement and the promotions consequent thereon leave a vacancy in the list of captains and assistant quartermasters which was filled Thursday by the appointment of First Lieut. John Baxter, jr., Ninth cavalry.

Long Bicycle Run.

Lieut. H. D. Wise, United States army, started from the east front of the capitol at 5:10 o'clock Thursday morning on a bike for New York. He goes via Baltimore, Wilmington and Philadelphia and hopes to break the record between this city and New York, and reach his destination in 24 hours. He was paced by single riders between here and Philadelphia and between the latter city and New York will be paced by tandem teams of the New York Athletic club.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—United States Consul Smyth, at Carthage, in a report to the state department says that as a result of the new United States tariff, a most notable increase has followed in the shipment of ivory nuts from that port to the United States. The new tariff on vegetable ivory buttons has caused the crude article to be shipped to the United States instead of to Europe where it was formerly largely manufactured into buttons.

EVANGELINA CISNEROS

Offered a Home by Mrs. Martha M. Purdy, of Kansas.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—Evangelina Cisneros, who has just escaped from the narrow walls of a Cuban prison, has been offered a home on the wide prairies of Kansas, where the barbed wire fences are the only suggestions of a trocha.

The woman's auxiliary of the Cuban committee met at the home of Mrs. Martha M. Purdy and discussed Cuban affairs, congratulating each other on the escape of Miss Cisneros, in whose interest the society had petitioned the pope and queen of Spain for clemency.

In the midst of the rejoicings Mrs. Purdy announced that she wrote to Miss Cisneros in New York, offering the young refugee a permanent home with her father and mother, Mrs. George M. Munger, in Greenwood county, Kansas. Mr. Munger now lives near Eureka, where he has a large fruit farm.

Mr. Munger lived for a time in Cuba, where he has many friends and acquaintances, and he speaks Spanish fluently. He and his wife are much interested in the Cuban question.

Was it Murder or Suicide?

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 15.—Matthew Rogers, a grocer at 136 West Randall street, and Mrs. Ida Wright, his mistress, were found dead in Rogers' house Thursday morning. Both had been shot. The police look upon it as a case of murder and suicide, but Rogers' relatives insist that it was the work of a former admirer of the woman. Her husband is living and is thought to be in West Virginia. The only other person in the house was a daughter of the dead woman, who knew nothing of the tragedy until awakened several hours after it occurred.

Condemned Tea.

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 15.—Francis Seelye, government tea inspector, condemned 830 chests of tea which arrived from the Orient on the steamship Monmouthshire. Several days ago he condemned 422 chests consigned to a Chicago firm. The entire lot was found to be old, trashy tea unfit for use.

Gold Found in Wisconsin.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Oct. 15.—Gold has been found in Rock county, within eight miles of Janesville. Two farmers were in the city Thursday with samples of gravel taken from the farm which showed gold in fair quantities.

FIELD'S RESIGNATION

Accepted By President McKinley With Kindly Expressions of Regard.

Justice Field Resigns Because of the Duties of His Office Becoming Too Arduous for His Strength—His Judicial Career Covers Many Years of Service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—The following letter was given out Thursday afternoon:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 15, 1897. Dear Mr. Chief Justice and Brethren:—Near the close of last term, feeling that the duties of my office had become too arduous for my strength, I transmitted my resignation to the president, to take effect on the first day of December next, and this he has accepted, with kindly expressions of regard, as will be seen from a copy of his letter, which is as follows:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Oct. 10, 1897."

"HON. STEVEN J. FIELD, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Washington, D. C.—My Dear Sir:—In April last Chief Justice Fuller, accompanied by Mr. Justice Brewer, handed me your resignation as associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, to take effect December 1, 1897."

"In hereby accepting your resignation, I wish to express my deep regret that you feel compelled by advancing years to sever your active connection with the court which you have so long been a distinguished member."

"Entering upon your great office in May, 1863, you will on the first day of December have served upon the bench for a period of 34 years and seven months—a term longer than that of any member of the court since its creation, and throughout a period of special importance in the history of the country, occupied with as grave public questions as have ever confronted that tribunal for decision."

"I congratulate you therefore most heartily upon a service of such exceptional duration, fidelity and distinction. Nor can I overlook the fact that you received your commission from Abraham Lincoln, and graciously spared by a kind Providence, have survived all the members of the court of his appointment."

"Upon your retirement both the bench and the country will sustain a great loss, but the high character and great ability of your work will live and long be remembered, not only by your colleagues, but by your grateful fellow-countrymen."

"With personal esteem and sincere best wishes for your contentment and happiness during the period of rest which you have so well earned, I am, dear sir,

"Very truly yours,

"WILLIAM MCKINLEY."

My judicial career covers many years of service.

Having been elected a member of the supreme court of California, I assumed that office October 13, 1857, holding it for five years, say, means and five days, the latter part of the time being chief justice.

On the tenth day of March, 1863, I was commissioned by President Lincoln a justice of the supreme court of the United States, taking the oath of office on the twentieth day of the following May.

When my resignation takes effect my period of service on this bench will have exceeded that of any of my predecessors, while my entire judicial life will have embraced more than 40 years. I may be pardoned for saying that during this period, long in comparison with the brevity of human life, though in the retrospect it has gone with the swiftness of a tale that is told, I have not shunned to declare in every case coming before me for decision the conclusions which my deliberate convictions compelled me to arrive at, by the constant exercise of such abilities and requirements as I possessed.

It is a pleasant thing in my memory that my appointment came from President Lincoln, of whose appointees I am the last survivor. Up to that time there had been no representative here of the Pacific coast. A new empire had risen in the west whose laws were those of another country. The land titles were from Spanish and Mexican grants, both of which were often overlaid by the claims of the first settlers. To bring order out of this confusion, congress passed an act providing for another seat on this bench, with the intention that it should be filled by some one familiar with these conflicting titles and with the mining laws of the coast, and as it so happened that I had formed the principal of these laws, and was moreover, chief justice of California, it was the wish of the senators and representatives of that state, as well as those from Oregon, that I should succeed to the new position. At their request Mr. Lincoln sent my name to the senate and the nomination was unanimously confirmed.

At the head of the court, when I became one of its members, was the venerable Chief Justice Taney, and among the associate justices was Mr. Justice Wayne, who had sat with Chief Justice Marshall, thus constituting a link between the past and future, and, as it were, binding into unity nearly an entire century of the life of this court.

During my incumbency three chief justices and 16 associate justices have passed away, leaving me precious remembrances of common labors and intimate and agreeable companionship.

The volumes of our reports show that I alone have written 620 opinions. If to these are added 17 opinions in the circuit court and 265 prepared while I was on the supreme court of California, it will be seen that I have voiced the decision in 1,048 cases.

These many years have indeed been years of labor and of toil, but they have brought their own reward; and we can all join in thanksgiving to the Author of our being that we have been permitted to spend so much of our lives in the service of our country.

With profound respect and regard, I am, my dear brethren,

Very sincerely and always yours,

STEPHEN J. FIELD.

Following is the court's reply:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, Oct. 13, 1897.

Dear Brother Field—We are profoundly moved by the letter in which you announce to us your retirement from the bench. The termination of a judicial career of such length and distinction can not fail to inspire among all your countrymen, and indeed, wherever the realm of jurisprudence extends, a keen sense of loss which to your colleagues assumes the aspect of a personal bereavement. We feel that our parting involves not simply the deprivation of the assistance afforded by your learning, your vast experience, and your earnestness in advocacy of your convictions, but the severance of those relations which have contributed so much to lighten the hardest labors of the road.

This is not the time or place to dwell on the reputation you have achieved as a jurist. The record is made up and may safely be committed to the judgment of posterity.

But we can not part with you as an active member of the court without the fervent expression of the hope that you may be spared for many years to enjoy the repose you have so thoroughly earned and the commendation bestowed on good and faithful service.

The Conference Was a Failure.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Oct. 15.—The effort to adjust the difference between the coal operators of Kanawha valley and their men has failed absolutely, and President Ratchford left Thursday night for Columbus, disheartened over his failure.

Ex-Senator Jones' Remains.

PENNSACOLA, Fla., Oct. 15.—The remains of ex-United States Senator Charles W. Jones, arrived here from Detroit, Mich., Thursday morning. The funeral services were held in the afternoon at St. Michael's Catholic church, which was crowded.

Gold Found in Wisconsin.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Oct. 15.—Gold has been found in Rock county, within eight miles of Janesville. Two farmers were in the city Thursday with samples of gravel taken from the farm which showed gold in fair quantities.

THEATER DOME

In Robinson's Opera House, Cincinnati, Falls During a Performance.

Three Persons Instantly Killed and Many Wounded, Some Fatally, in a Panic That Followed—The Play Billed for Next Week Was "Under the Dome."

CINCINNATI, Oct. 16.—At the beginning of the first act "Dangers of a Great City" at Robinson's opera house, Friday evening, there was a sharp crack in the ceiling of the theater, and a piece of plastering a foot long and three inches wide fell into the orchestra from the east side. Many of the audience started to their feet, but there was no further intimation of trouble.

At the end of the second act the stage hands were setting the scenes, and little Alice Opie, child specialist, was in front of the curtain doing her act as "Yellow Kid." Suddenly and without further warning, the huge dome of the theater fell with a dead crash onto the chairs, a distance of a hundred feet.

A panic ensued. Women screamed, men groaned and the most frightful scenes were enacted. The little child actress ran behind the curtain, and all lights were extinguished by the breaking of the main electric wire. In five minutes ten patrol wagons and as many fire engines and ladder companies were surrounding the opera house, and a howling mob was rushing about interfering with the work of rescue.

Capt. Conway and his salvage corps, who were first on the scene, seized half a dozen bodies, and not stopping to see whether they were dead or alive, galloped off with them to the hospital. As fast as the patrol wagons arrived they were filled with limp bodies and rushed to the hospital.

While the excitement was at its height another crash came. It was the entire ceiling tearing away from the rafters and tumbling down upon the mass of struggling humanity below. It sounded like a whirlwind and the noise was heard for a square around. Hundreds rushed to the front of the building on the outside, but were met by the streams of people rushing from the inside and driven back across the street. Many were crushed under foot.

A man named Goldberg, living at 642 Barr street, was carried into the drug store of Al Boehmer at Eighth street and Central avenue. He had a fractured skull and was taken to the city hospital; will die.

Mrs. George Kleeman died at the hospital at 10 p. m. She was the daughter-in-law of Nick Kleeman. Pearl Hall, of 817 Sycamore street, daughter of carriage-maker on East Ninth street, was badly hurt and taken to the hospital.

Henry Fleck, 602 Broadway, in balcony, and two children have not been heard from. They are not at the hospital.

A daughter of George Otte, of the water works department, is at the hospital, seriously injured.

Samuel Rosenblum, agent 16, of the Working Boys' home, on Sycamore street, was in the gallery. He is at the hospital in a dangerous condition.

The following are in the hospital more or less seriously injured: Della Algeier and her three children; Mrs. J. and Daisy Fairhead, S. E. Long, Mary Scudder, of Newport, Ky.; Grace Connors, C. J. Weiss, Will Morton, aged 17, Sixth and Broadway, jumped into a pit. Fred Jenks, aged 26, 1216 Richmond street; T. C. Wiley, Dayton, Ky.; W. J. McCabe, Clint Edell, Jacob Weil, Mary Hess, John White, Amelia Weil, Mary Howe, Mary Moorman, Twelfth and Clay streets.

The dead are: An unknown man, Miss Lucy Cohen and Mrs. Geo. Kleeman.

The show being played was "Dangers of a Great City." The show underlined for next week was "Under the Dome."

The cause of the accident Friday night seems to be easily discovered. Among the first who entered the building after the dome had fallen was President George W. Rapp, of the Cincinnati Chapter American Institute of architects.

"It was not that dome," said he, pointing to the huge heap in the center of the floor, "that caused the trouble. The fault lies with the roof trusses. The house has been built more than 25 years, and the wood has shrunk until the bolts and nails afforded the smallest possible security. One of these trusses had rotted away from its fastenings; it has parted and thrown the two sections down, and they in their descent pulled the dome with them. These wood trusses are of pine and they shrink very perceptibly in the course of years. They should be examined every five or six years. Modern structures are put up with steel trusses. The roof of this theater is liable to come down any minute."

Friday night's disaster recalls forcibly a more fearful one which took place in the same building in February, 1876. Friday night there was a real cause for the panic and loss of life; then there was no cause whatever except the wickedly foolish cry of fire started when a little sputtering hiss came from the calcium light in the upper gallery. The house was packed mostly with women and children to witness an allegory of America given by hundreds of school children.

A MIGHTY FEAT.

Iron Bridge Replaced by One of Steel in Two and One-Half Minutes.

The Span Was 242 Feet Long, 25 Feet Wide and 30 Feet Deep—Nearly 1,700 Tons of Steel and Iron Moved a Distance of at Least 25 Feet.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—The feat of replacing an iron bridge span 242 feet long, 25 feet wide and 30 feet in depth with one of the same dimensions of steel was accomplished in this city Sunday in two minutes and 32 seconds. In this space of time nearly 1,700 tons of iron and steel were moved a distance of 25 feet, and there was not a slip or a hitch in the entire proceedings. This remarkable feat of engineering was accomplished at what is known as the connecting railroad bridge over the Schuylkill just above Girard avenue. It is the bridge that bears the tracks of the New York division of the Pennsylvania railroad, the busiest division of the Pennsylvania system.

The time set for the replacement was the 48 minutes intervening between the passage over the bridge of the Chestnut Hill accommodation trains leaving Broad street station at 2:47 p. m. and at 3:35 p. m.

A work train crossed the eastern end of the bridge and stopped. The gangs of trackmen began to unscrew the rails of the westbound track on the old span. This done, the grapples of the work train took hold of the ends of the rails, the engine started up and the entire length of rails, 242 feet, was snaked off in short order.

Meanwhile four stationary engines, one at each end on a level with the bridge foundations and another at each end on scows securely moored at the base of the bridge piers, were puffing and emphasizing their readiness for the task they had to do. There was said to be less than a hundred horse power represented in these four engines, yet so well was everything arranged that they moved the leviathan without any apparent overexertion.

Then the signal was given for the little stationary engines to assert themselves. It seemed as if they all started at the identical instant. There was a tightening of the cables, an almost imperceptible creak of a wheel somewhere, and the big bulk began to move northward. It was like clockwork.

As the edge of the iron span began to show beyond the bridge piers the crowds on the north side of the river set up a shout, and as the breadth of the new steel span began to disappear behind the piers the crowds on the southern coigns of vantage also joined in the cheer, and almost before the cheer had died away the mighty feat had been accomplished. In just two minutes and thirty-two seconds from the time of starting the engines the new span occupied the exact position from which the old one had been removed.

CHARLES A. DANA,

The Famous Editor of the New York Sun, Passes Away, Surrounded by His Family.

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, died at his home in Glen Cove, Long Island, at 1:20 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Dana's death had been expected for several hours, and his family and physicians were at his bedside when the end came. His condition had been such for several months that the members of his family kept themselves in constant readiness to go to his bedside at any moment. On Saturday morning he had a relapse, and it was apparent that recovery was impossible. Several times, however, he rallied, but toward night he began to sink. During the night there were feeble rallies, but they did not last long. Sunday morning it was seen that the end was but a few hours off, and his attendants remained almost constantly at his bedside. The end came quietly.

The show being played was "Dangers of a Great City." The show underlined for next week was "Under the Dome."

The cause of the accident Friday night seems to be easily discovered. Among the first who entered the building after the dome had fallen was President George W. Rapp, of the Cincinnati Chapter American Institute of architects.

POSTAL SERVICE.

There Are 1,164 Railway Postal Lines, Manned by 7,854 Clerks.

There Are 42 Steamboat Lines With 57 Clerks—Grand Total of Miles Traveled by All Classes of Service 282,830,031—Pneumatic Tube Mail Service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—An abstract of the annual report of the general superintendent of the railway mail service follows:

At the close of the year there were 1,164 railway post office lines, manned by 6,854 clerks; 33 electric and cable lines, with 103 clerks; 42 steamboat lines, with 57 clerks, making total number of lines 1,239, and total number of clerks 7,013. In addition to these there were 311 clerks assigned to duty at important junctions and depots, and 238 detailed to clerical duty in the various offices of the service, making a grand total of 7,562 clerks.

The miles of railroad covered by railway post office car service was 154,225; of electric and cable, 303, and of steamboat lines, 7,459. The grand total of miles traveled of all classes of service was 282,830,031. There were 634 whole cars in use and 175 in reserve, and 2,026 apartments in cars in use and 540 in reserve.

The number of pieces of all classes of mail matter distributed on the cars during the year was 11,571,540,680, exclusive of registered matter and city mail. Of registered matter there were 16,256,663 pieces in all. The amount of city mail distributed for stations and carriers during the year aggregated 462,469,640 pieces. The increase of ordinary mail handled over the previous year was 3.7 per cent. A comparative table covering a period of 10 years shows that there has been an increase in the amount of mail handled of 77.2 per cent and increase in the working force of 48.6 per cent.

There were 559 casualties during the year, in which 14 clerks lost their lives, 33 were seriously and 75 slightly injured. This is a larger number of casualties and fatalities than has occurred during any previous year since the organization of the service. The passage of a bill for the relief of the families of clerks killed in the line of duty; of clerks injured and unfitted for service permanently, or temporarily, and for the retirement on partial pay of clerks who have served so long as to be unfitted for service, has again been urged.

The annual report of W. S. Shallenberger, second assistant postmaster general made public Sunday night gives an interesting review of the principal developments in the entire postal transportation service of the United States and connecting foreign mails. It shows an aggregate of appropriations for this large part of the postal service for the current year of $51,041,238; the probable deficiency is $500,000, making the estimated expenditures this year $51,541,238. This will be $1,623,045, or three and one quarter per cent more than for the fiscal year just closed. The estimate for the fiscal year, 1899, is $53,357,260, which is $1,796,021 more than the estimated expenditure for the current year. The annual rate for the inland mail service in the year just closed was $49,862,074, and for foreign mail service $1,791,170, after deducting $258,029 for intermediary service to foreign countries.

Last year there was only one pneumatic postal tube in operation in the country, that in Philadelphia. Since then four more contracts have been executed in Philadelphia, New York, Boston and between New York and Brooklyn.

Concerning this new postal feature Gen. Shallenberger reports: "It is quite possible to carry second, third and fourth class matter as well as first, when it can be made profitable. Extensions to stations several miles distant from the main office, eventually, will save clerical force as well as expedite delivery in distant cities from 12 to 24 hours. The most important source of revenue to the department will be the large increase of local correspondence and special delivery letters. The extension of the tubular system will be necessarily slow and probably confined to populous centers."

WINDSOR, N. S.,

Almost Completely Destroyed by Fire—Nearly Four Hundred Buildings Burned—Loss $3,000,000.

HALIFAX, N. S., Oct. 18.—Historic Windsor, one of the most beautiful towns in the province, was devastated by fire Sunday morning. For six hours, beginning shortly before 3 a. m., the fire, fanned by a violent northwest gale, raged so fiercely that the local fire department was absolutely helpless to cope with it and within half an hour after its discovery the mayor began to call for outside assistance. Long before noon the town had been eaten up almost completely, the area covered by the flames being nearly a mile square, and of the four hundred or more buildings that occupy the section, barely half a dozen scorched structures remain. Among the buildings that escaped are the Windsor cotton factory, King's college, the Anglican church, the Edgehill School for Girls and the Baffin hotel. The total loss is estimated roughly at $3,000,000. While a number of the heaviest losers are partially insured and some of them pretty well covered, the total insurance is calculated to be not more than half a million.

British Output of Steel.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The Times announces that the British output of steel during the first half of the year 1897 was 2,350,927 tons, the largest output ever known for a similar period in the history of Great Britain or of any other European country.

DON'T CROWD.

What's the use of all this shovin'?
Big folks crowdin' down the small;
Wonder why they can't be lovin'—
Ain't much difference, after all.
Though I'm poor, and you, my brother,
Are a solid man of means,
Folks can't tell us, which from 't other,
Through them new X-ray machines.

Seems to me that I'd be willin',
When I'd got an easy berth,
Other people should be fillin'
Up a little of the earth.
I should hate for death to find me
Grindin' my existence out—
Hoardin' cash to leave behind me
For my heirs to fight about.

Makes me think of children playin'—
Makin' sand-heaps on the beach;
Handful onto handful layin',
High as ever they can reach,
Till the comin' tide, a-frothin',
Sends a big wave toward the land,
And that pile just melts to nothin'
But a hummock in the sand.

So, my brother, don't be greedy,
Kinder help us on our way;
Them that's wealthy, them that's needy,
Are the reg'lar kind of clay.
And the march of time is swellin',
And the years are bringin' round,
Rich and poor, a common dwellin',
Just a hummock in the ground.

THE OLD SILVER TRAIL.

BY MARY E. STICKNEY.

[Copyright 1896, by J. B. Lippincott Co.]

CHAPTER XI.—CONTINUED.

Neil's face was pale and a strange light shone in his eyes as he stepped in front of her, barring the way. "You could love me if you would let yourself—I know it!—and you are false to yourself when you turn from me like this," he declared, in a tense tone. "You are making a mountain out of this trouble of the mines, when between you and me it is as nothing. To me, indeed, there is nothing on earth that counts—nothing that I value in the least in comparison with your love. If I could have that, the rest would settle itself. I would concede anything—sacrifice anything—"

He stopped, looking about with a startled glance, his eyes coming back to her face, which wore a strangely frightened expression. There was a strong smell of burning wood about them, while a dark cloud was streaming up against the blueness of the sky behind the rocks which cut off all below from their view.

"What is it?" she exclaimed. But even as she spoke, there was a deafening explosion, while the sky seemed blackened by a rushing mass riddled with myriads of darker blotches, of which hundreds seemed to be falling all about them, fragments of still burning wood.

Wild with fright, Dorothy had thrown herself into the arms that were instinctively reached out to seize her. "What is it? Oh, what has happened?" she gasped, hiding her eyes shudderingly against his shoulder.

"It is nothing, sweetheart; you are safe," he murmured, his cheek laid caressingly against her soft hair. For the moment it appeared to him indeed that nothing counted against the fact that he was holding her there in his arms unharmed—against the sweet truth that she had come to that shelter of her own impulse; but the man of affairs was quick to awake in him even in all the tremulous joy of feeling that in this unconsidered action she had virtually conceded his heart's desire. "But I must leave you, dearest. You will not mind if I go for a moment to see what it is," he urged, tenderly holding her the closer to him for the thought of presently letting her go. "You will wait until I come back?"

"No; I will go with you," she rejoined, her cheeks still pale with fright. "Oh, I must," as his look seemed to dissuade her.

His thoughts had flown at once to the Mascot shaft-house, from his memory of a time when a similar explosion had rent the air to leave him almost penniless. Could it be that such devilish work had been repeated? She must not come. "No, dear one. Do you not see that, whatever has happened, we should not be seen coming back together?" he breathlessly argued, knowing that there was something she would surely heed. "Please, sweetheart," he pleadingly added, as she still hesitated.

"But must I stay here until you come back?" she helplessly questioned, trembling still as she drew away from him. "Will you surely come back?"

"Surely, if I can. If I do not come—wait ten minutes and then come yourself." So he breathlessly planned, moved to take her again in his arms, impetuously showering kisses upon her, in spite of all the awful possibilities of the moment, mad with joy that she did not repulse him. "Whatever happens, sweetheart," he passionately whispered as he left her, "remember that now you are mine—mine!"

Dorothy waited, nervously pacing back and forth, for a few minutes, trying to think what she had done, what it meant, and to what end it all portended. Did she love him? Had she loved him all the while? And what would her father say? But, unnerved as she was, with the dense cloud of smoke still rising and the confused sound of crashing timbers and hoarse cries continually growing louder, coherent thought was out of the question. Half of the time for which Neil had stipulated had not passed by before she could endure the suspense no longer and was hurrying down the hill herself, now filled with alarmed vexation that she had been induced to delay her coming at all, since it needed but a glance in the direction of the fire to tell her that it was the Grubstake buildings which were going. She knew enough of the costly machinery there housed to be appalled at her father's loss; but it did not occur to her to think of the graver menace until she met Harvey Neil coming back to her and somehow comprehended the awful tragedy in his face. She stopped as though turned to stone, staring at him with wild eyes, her lips parted but incapable of uttering any sound.

"You see—it is the Grubstake," he panted, his eyes full of pity and yearning tenderness as he took both her nerveless hands in his. "They say the fire caught in the boiler-house and spread to the shaft-house in an instant. There were powder and giant caps stored there in the back room—that was what we heard. It was criminal of McCready, having such stuff there." He lingered over the broken sentences, warding off the question he knew must come.

"And papa—" she gasped, withdrawing her hands and making as though she would rush on down the hill to see without waiting for his answer.

"It is hoped that they are all right," he reluctantly returned, his eyes entreating her to have hope. "There are ten men down the shaft; but if the air holds good—it must be all right. There is sure to be time enough to save them."

"They cannot get out?" Her white lips formed the words, but he guessed rather than heard them.

"The steam connections and hoister, everything, went to pieces in the explosion," he slowly explained, his voice eloquent of compassion. "It was impossible for anybody to escape after the alarm was given. But as soon as we can get the fire out—Oh, darling, darling, don't look at me like that! Don't think of giving up until we know. The men were working in the levels quite away from the shaft, and the inference is that your father and McCready were with them. There is no reason to believe that they will not be gotten out all right."

"But you do not believe it! I can see in your face that you do not!" she passionately exclaimed, drawing back from him with a look of horror. "He is dead, and you know it! And to think that at the very moment he died I was—Oh, go away from me! I never want to see you again!—never, never! To think that I should have turned against him for you! And he the dearest and best of fathers—always so good to me, so good! It makes me hate you!"

He looked at her with pitying tenderness as at one distraught. "You do not know what you are saying, dear," he murmured, soothingly. "And you must not give up. I would not tell you so if it were not true. Your father is probably alive and unharmed. And in a little while he may be with you to laugh at all your fright. Don't give up yet, sweetheart."

"How dare you call me that—you?" she bitterly retorted, her eyes flashing blue fire upon him, her face like stone. "Do you not see that it is a judgment upon me for caring for you, for being untrue to him? Caring for you, did I say? Oh, how could I ever dream of such a thing! To care for you, who brought him here, who were the cause of all this trouble!—you who, if he is dead, have been the cause of his death! I tell you that I hate you—I shall always hate you!"

As she went on in this growing frenzy she had been blindly hurrying down the hill, Neil keeping beside her with watchful eye upon her heedless steps, but now he stopped, his peremptory look bidding her also pause. His face was white and set, his eyes were full of sadness beyond words, but still his tone was very gentle as he said: "You must not come any farther, Dorothy. It is not fit for you." They were now so near the fire that burning bits of wood littered the grass all about them, while the smoke and heat from the well-nigh burnt-out shaft-house made the air stiflingly oppressive. Crowds of men were hurrying up the hill, many turning curiously to stare at the colonel's daughter. "You must not come farther," Neil said again, gently authoritative. "You can do no good here. I wish you would let me take you down to my cabin."

"To your cabin! no," she implacably returned, glancing away from him as though her eyes loathed the sight of his face. "But I will wait here—if you will go away."

He hesitated, reluctantly regarding her for an instant, but then, with a face as sad as her own, he walked away, to send to her a woman he had discovered among the crowd. It was Mrs. Morrison, who kept the Mascot boarding-house, a motherly soul, though her appearance always promised ill for the cleanliness of her cookery. Panting with good-humored hurry, she came up the hill to where the girl was standing, a sort of beaming pity upon her round, rosy face.

"Dear! dear! but we'd ought to be thankful it ain't no worse!" she fervently exclaimed, energetically stamping out a smoldering fagot that threatened to set her gown afire.

Dorothy turned upon the intruder with a stony stare; but then, curiously touched by the look of kindly commiseration, her expression changed, her face nervously working in lines of pain as she replied, in a strange, choked voice: "But it could not be worse! oh, it could not!"

"Well, now, it might," returned Mrs. Morrison, in cheery argument. "I reckon there's never anything so bad that the Lord couldn't 'a' found a way to have it worse if He'd 'a' had a mind. If there'd 'a' been an explosion in the mine 'stead of on top, that would 'a' been enough right worse. But bein' it's the nature of powder to blow up 'stead of down, why, it jest natchelly stands to reason that them men ain't hurt a mite. Oh, you ain't no call to take on, honey—sure. I'd bet a dollar against a doughnut with anybody that they're all down there as live 's crickets this minute—jest natchelly swearin' 'n' ram-pagin' round, like enough, because it's gettin' on toward dinner time 'n' them without a bite. That's the man of it, you know. Nawthin' riles 'em quite so much 's gettin' left at meal times."

Dorothy looked at her with a sort of dazed bewilderment for an instant, breaking out into wild, hysterical laughter, which almost instantly turned to uncontrollable sobbing. Stirred to quick sympathy beyond any thought of social difference or arm-length ceremonial, the woman caught her in a warm, motherly embrace, and, equally oblivious of the strangeness of such resting-place, the girl hid her face against the ample shoulder with the simple abandon of a child.

"There, there, honey, that's right. It'll do you good," murmured the woman, understandingly, soothingly patting Dorothy's back, while at the same time bestowing a nod of intelligence upon Harvey Neil, who had rushed up with anxious, pained face, although too discreet to utter a word of his eager sympathy, his will longing to be of some service to his love. "Women's hearts is like that. When they're full to bustin' nawthin' cases 'em up like a good cry."

Continually the crowd was increasing. A line of willing hands quickly formed to convey water from the Mascot pumps; while mothers, wives and children of the imprisoned miners, surrounded by sympathetic friends, looked on, sobbing and moaning. Hardly any impression seemed to be made on the flames until, after what appeared a long time in the possessing impatience, the extinguisher arrived from camp; and even then, when the fire was conquered, progress was tediously slow. The heavy blackened timbers were hot and difficult to handle, while, for want of space, only a few could work at clearing away the debris which choked the mouth of the shaft.

It was not until the middle of the afternoon that an attempt could be made to enter the mine, and then it was Harvey Neil who came forward, the first to go down. A solemn hush fell upon the crowd as they watched him step into the bucket, while the crude hoisting apparatus, hastily constructed, creakingly passed him out of sight. Everybody knew that if the air below had turned foul, as many held must be the case, another victim might be added to swell the horror of that day; and hardly a whisper broke the stillness until the signal came to bid them draw him back. Then, as he reappeared, a wild cheer broke from lips turned pale, and women sobbed for joy when he told that the air seemed good, which promised well for the men below; but he had found, some forty feet down, fallen timbers so wedged across the shaft that there must be more hard work before the full descent could be made.

The sun was setting when finally the way was clear. Again Neil laid his hand on the side of the bucket, although now there were others who would have gone; but there was that in his manner which gave him the place without discussion; and again the crowd, in awed expectancy, watched him out of sight.

He was gone much longer this time; and when at length he returned, the first look at his face told the staring eyes what it was that, covered by a

"I tell you I hate you, I shall always hate you."

coat, lay huddled in the bucket at his feet—the dreadful something that but a few short hours ago had been his enemy, Col. Randolph Meredith.

"Dead—every one," Neil whispered to those nearest, as he stepped out upon the ground, baring his head before he turned back to help the other hands that were reverently outstretched to lift to earth the burden he had brought.

Long before this Mrs. Morrison had persuaded Dorothy to go home with her, and Neil would permit no one to go there with the dreadful truth—until teams had come to carry the dead down to camp. Then, with a slow step, lagging no less because of the painfulness of his errand than for the utter physical exhaustion following the frenzied toil and excitement of the day, he betook himself over the hill to the Mascot boarding-house.

Recalling with sharp sense of dread Dorothy's mood of the morning, he thought it better to let her receive the awful truth from Mrs. Morrison, who, however uncouth in speech and manner, had yet a woman's heart to tell her how to soften the blow for the unhappy girl.

He sat down upon the steps outside when he had sent her with the message, his heart aching for his love while he waited to hear how she bore it; meaning by and by to beg a word with her, to learn if she would have him ride to Orodelphia that night to telegraph her friends, or what her wishes might be respecting her father.

A long time he patiently waited, after Mrs. Morrison had reported that the girl was crying "fit to break her heart"; refusing the good woman's urgency that he should come in to supper, although to please her he accepted the tea and toast she brought him at the door, feeling the better for the refreshment which he had been too much wrought up to think of needing.

It seemed to him hours before Mrs. Morrison, listening at the door, and hearing no sound, finally decided that Miss Meredith might now be calm enough to hear that he waited to see her; but it was with a frightened air that, after considerable delay, she came back.

Miss Meredith had begun taking on, crazy-like, at the very idea of seeing Mr. Neil, she reported, with evident reluctance, pitying the pain and mortification she could not but see upon his face. "She says as how you hated her father 'n' she mustn't never forget it. Of course she don't rightly sense what she's sayin', 'n' bein' you're a stranger to her 'n' all, the good woman soothingly and in all innocence argued, "nebber it's natchel shes should be prejudiced. Anyhow, she is; there's no blinkin' that, Mr. Neil; 'n' she's so sot, I don't believe there would be no manner of use your seein' her anyhow. I'll take her back to camp 'n' do for her 's much 's I can. She don't seem to sense that I belong to the Mascot; but you—why, it's onreasonable, of course, but what you goin' to do about it? I s'pose her pa's set her up to it, 'n' it's only jest natchel, her feelin' so. You can't blame her."

"No," said Neil, wearily, his face as dulled and set as those which had been brought up out of the mine that day, "I can't blame her."

BISMARCK'S NARROW ESCAPE.

His Affair of Honor with a Dead Shot, Who Was Offended by His Stare.

In a little pamphlet regarding the state of the Wiesbadeners in Friedrichsruh there has appeared a Bismarck anecdote, which shows how near Germany once was to losing in his youth her great unifier. The same anecdote also illustrates how duels are still made in Germany.

Bismarck first visited Wiesbaden two or three years after taking his university degree. He went one evening to the big dance hall in the Kurhaus and, during a pause between dances, sat on a sofa talking with a friend and looking at the persons who walked by. He had a sharp eye and a defiant air, even in his best tempered moods, and several men returned his looks with ill-natured stares. Eventually a young doctor, Gustav Lange, of Heidelberg, walked up to the sofa and, fixing his eyes on Bismarck, inquired:

"Why do you stare at me?"

Now Lange was a very handsome young man and Bismarck was in a happy mood. These two facts distasteful to Bismarck, he answered:

"Because I like your appearance."

"But I do not like yours," was Lange's reply.

An animated dialogue followed, Bismarck at first seeking to appease Lange's wrath and Lange trying his best to make trouble. The upshot was that cards were exchanged in order that Lange might wipe out with blood the deadly affront of being stared at by Otto von Bismarck. The seconds arranged that the meeting should take place in the Grand Duchy of Hesse, not far from Biebrich.

Lange was a dead shot with the pistol, and pistols were the weapons to be used in the duel. The young physician could hit the two-mark piece, flipped in the air, nine times out of ten. It looked bad for Bismarck. His seconds undoubtedly felt that he was about the same as a dead man from the moment he stepped into the field, and they labored hard to find a peaceable solution of the quarrel. The English captain, whom Bismarck had made one of his seconds, was especially eager to prevent bloodshed, and he proposed to Lange, at the place of meeting, that the principals talk the quarrel over before risking their lives for such a trivial cause. Lange said eventually that he would do his best to settle the affair without a shot if his opponent would meet him half way. The Englishman hurried to Bismarck with the doctor's offer of the olive branch, but Bismarck would not have it. While the Englishman slowly paced off the distance, stretching his legs to make it as long as possible, the other second argued with Bismarck. Lange leaned against a tree and said nothing. Just as his seconds were expecting the principals to take their places Bismarck yielded. To the surprise of his seconds he did not wait for any preliminary conversation. He walked across the field, stretched out his hand, and remarked:

"Well, we will try to live in peace, then."

Lange shook hands and the quarrel was at an end. On his way home from the field Lange remarked to his seconds:

"It is better that it ended; it would have been too bad to blow daylight through him."

Almost 50 years later Lange celebrated in Heidelberg the jubilee anniversary of his graduation. After he and his friends had reviewed the stirring events of the last half century and the slow welding of divided Germany into one great empire under Bismarck's master hand, the doctor remarked, quaintly:

"It is better that it ended; it would have been too bad to blow daylight through him."—N. Y. Sun.

Her Letter and His Answer.

"Would you be kind enough to return my photograph?" she wrote. "I gave it to you in a moment of girlish folly, and I have since had occasion to regret that I was so thoughtless in such matters." Of course she pictured that photograph framed and hung up in his room and was inclined to think that he would part with it with deep regret. Just why she wanted it returned is immaterial. Of course he had offended her in some way, but it is unnecessary to inquire how. The answer to her note came the following day. "I regret," it read, "that I am unable at this late date to pick out your photograph. However, I send you my entire collection, numbering a little over 600, and would request that you return all except your own by express at my expense."—Chicago Post.

Society.

Little Chick—What do you let that ugly little thing come under your wing for?

Old Hen (who had inadvertently hatched a duck's egg)—I can't help it, my dear. We've got to put up with the creature because she belongs to our set, you know.—N. Y. Weekly.

The Proper Authority.
Husband—I think, my dear, I must consult a physician.
Wife—What for?
"For some remedy for my dyspepsia. I have most horrid dreams at night."
"Better consult a veterinary surgeon."
"A horse doctor?"
"Yes. A horse doctor should be the best authority on nightmare."—Tit-Bits.

Two Terrible Animals.
We find it hard to keep the wolf away from our front door.
But sometimes it's harder still to keep away the bore.
—N. Y. World.

NOT VERY MUSICAL.

Young Lady (to servant)—Anna, put the muzzle on Fido; I'm going to sing.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Broke the Record.
Mrs. Suburbs—My dear, our new kitchen girl is a marvel. She has been here three weeks and hasn't broken a single thing.

Mr. Suburbs—Hasn't broken anything? I should say she had.

Mrs. Suburbs—What do you mean?
Mr. Suburbs—Did we ever have a girl before who stayed more than three days?—N. Y. World.

His Occupation Gone.

A Normal Woman.
Jinks—What a foolish question! Of course my wife objects to my smoking! Filkins—Why, how could I know?
Jinks—You ought to be well enough acquainted with me to know that I would not have married an eccentric woman.—N. Y. Journal.

Getting His Evens.
She—What do you mean by circulating the report that I live a hand-to-mouth existence. How dare you?

He—Well, that was the way it seemed to me. Whenever I call on you, you put in most of the time yawning.—Indianapolis Journal.

Thoughtless Girl.

"Didn't Miss Sprocket's father die last month?"

"Yes. What of it?"

"Why, the unfeeling creature never has had the decency to have the frame of her bicycle painted plack."—Chicago Post.

A Fitting Head.

"What sort of a head shall I put on this story about the fellow who was tarred and feathered?" asked the new reporter.

"How will 'He was a bird' do?" suggested the court man.—Philadelphia North American.

Mean Thing.
Miss Chatter—I knew you would be here to-day to see sister.

Mr. Cuddler (interrog.)—Intuition? Miss Chatter—No—observation. You always appear on the same day that Ethel refuses onions at dinner.—Judge.

A Word of Warning.
In buying diamonds, let's not haste, But watch lest dealers trick us. For oh, they have some made of paste With which they love to stick us.

Reads That Way.
"I didn't know that Deacon Good committed suicide."

"He didn't. Who said so?"
"This obituary says that 'he walked fearlessly down into the dark river.'"
—Chicago Record.

Not One of That Kind.
"No, Mr. Hankinson," said Tommy to the young man who was waiting in the parlor for Tommy's sister. "I ain't the kind of a little boy you're always readin' about in the papers what begs candy from the fellers that comes to see the 'r sisters. Still, if you've got any in your pockets I'd be willin' to take it."
—Chicago Tribune.

Why?
Tenant—I demand a rebate on my rent. Your darned old water-pipe burst, flooded my cellar, and my chickens were drowned.

Landlord—But, my dear sir, why didn't you keep ducks?—Philadelphia North American.

A Sad Blow.

Mr. Bliffers—Beg pardon, Mr. Hammer, but can you tell me where my wife is seated? I can't find her.

Mr. Hammer (auctioneer)—She has not been here to-day.

Mr. Bliffers (wildly)—My! My! She must be dead.—N. Y. Weekly.

Had Thought of That.

"Young man," said the elderly gentleman in a choking voice, "she is the only daughter I have."

"Yes," acknowledged the young man, "that is one reason I thought I would like to marry her."—Indianapolis Journal.

Perils of Society.

"Your daughter, madam, is suffering from general functional derangement."

"There—I've told her often that attending all them functions 'd be the death of her."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Suspicious.

Governess—Why don't you eat your consomme, Bertie?

Bertie—Cause I asked Harry what became of the cook papa discharged, and he said she was in the soup.—Puck.

Sure Death.

She—His widow engaged the Oh Hush Quartette to sing at her husband's funeral.

He—I suppose she wanted to avoid all possibility of his ever coming to life.—N. Y. Journal.

Public Speaking.

Hon. James R. Hindman, National Democratic candidate for Clerk of the Kentucky Court of Appeals, will speak at the court house Tuesday afternoon.

Hon. John W. Yerkes, of Danville, brother of Mayor W. L. Yerkes, will speak at the court house on Oct. 25.

Hon. W. M. Dickerson is announced to speak at the court house on the 30th. Judge H. C. Howard will speak at the court-house in this city, on Friday, Oct. 29, at seven o'clock p. m.

Supplemental Registration.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 25th, 26th and 27th, are the days fixed by law for supplemental registration. At this registration only those who were necessarily absent from the city or were sick on regular registration day can register.

The citizens of Woodford, Scott and Jessamine will give a grand barbecue Saturday in Viley's woods, near Midway. Among the noted speakers expected to be present are Hon. John G. Carlisle, Hon. Josiah Patterson, Senator Wm. Lindsay, Col. W. C. P. Breckinridge and Judge Yost. Saxton's band will furnish music for the occasion.

For the consideration of $500 Mr. Bryan has "consented" to speak at a county fair in Arkansas. Mr. Bryan is quite the rage as a county fair attraction. He will doubtless secure the silver nomination for President in 1900, but he will never be President. The people do not want a side-show attraction for a Chief Executive.

A SILVER Democrat at Lexington made a spectacle out of himself Wednesday night by interrupting Hon. Josiah Patterson's speech. Some people will never learn that the man who interrupts a speaker—be he preacher, political orator or a patent medicine fakir—always gets the worst of the argument.

W. J. BRYAN has offered a large sum of money to Ewing College, at Benton, Ill., to be known as the Mary Elizabeth Bryan fund, in compliment to his mother. The income is to be used annually during commencement week in cash prizes for the best essays on the science of government.

SAM SHACKLEFORD, the dumb silver candidate has spoken. He said: "Boys, I want you all to vote for me." This is better, anyhow, than a lot of silver bosh and Chicago platform ravings.

POOR old Kentucky, Ohio, Maryland, and New York have quarantined against Bryan, Bailey, Towne and other silver orators, and Kentucky has to stand 'em all—to say nothing of local talent.

HON. J. W. TOWNE, a free silver Republican from Duluth, has been imported to make silver speeches in Kentucky for the silver Democrats. Silver, silver, silver, is the issue.

NEW YORKERS are betting $1,000 to $700 on Van Wyck, the Tammany candidate for Mayor.

THE negroes have nominated candidates for county offices in Jessamine.

To the Voters of Bourbon County.

HAVING received the nomination in the Republican County Convention for County Clerk of Bourbon county, I take this method to ask the support of all my friends. I pledge myself to a conscientious and faithful discharge of official duties, if elected in November.

Respectfully,

[Communicated.]

The Mission of Democracy and the Democratic Party.

Civil government was established to protect both life and liberty.

Democracy is the friend of social order because it seeks to cure social evils. It is the enemy of anarchy and violence because it seeks wisely and prudently to eradicate the wrongs that lie at the root of popular discontent. It is not hostile to wealth, but it is hostile to plunder and it is jealous, as it should be, of inordinate power and of the growth of an oligarchy in a democratic republic.

There must be such a party in this country if it is to remain free. Representative Democracy is the foundation of our political philosophy—the voice of the people, the divinity of popular rights; and it has at all times the elements of all needed reform.

Our revolutionary fathers revolted and would not submit to be governed by a monarchy; and would not submit to unjust taxation even upon tea.

What is the situation to-day? We see this country ruled by trusts for the trusts and by the trusts and everything wrapped up in the coils of a trust. Statistics proved that this year cattle were several million short and the farmers confidently expected from five to five and a half cents for their fat cattle.

What was the result? It was not supply and demand. The powers met in Chicago presided over by Lord Armour and the dictum went forth that $4.50 should be the highest price and the farmers were compelled to submit. They would have hammered wheat back to thirty cents per bushel had it not been due to a widespread failure of the crops abroad amounting to almost a famine in the large country of India. All the products of the earth can be cornered under a high protective tariff and a single gold standard. Restore bimetalism and a tariff for revenue only and the trusts cannot live.

The single gold standard has been the direct cause of the financial distress that has fallen upon our people since its adoption; and the highest gold standard authorities admit that it has been a period of almost unexampled depression and disturbance of trade and industry with falling prices for nearly all the products of human labor including land since demonetization in 1873.

If the people of this country cling to the gold standard they must accept the rule of the trusts which means increased wealth to the very wealthy and increased poverty and degradation for the toiling masses.

A recent article written by Thomas G. Sherman shows that 9,600 persons in this country are worth an aggregate of twenty-four billions of dollars and that 20,000 own more than half the wealth of the whole country while 75,000,000 are supposed to own the other half.

We believe in honest money, the gold and the silver money of the constitution, and the coinage of both metals without discrimination against either into standard dollars of final payment and redemption. It is the legal endowment that gives money its value and not the commercial price of the bullion.

The material in a hundred-dollar green back is worth probably the fourth of a cent and it is worth five twenty-dollar gold pieces the world over.

We believe in a tariff so adjusted as not to foster monopolies and breed trusts and to favor the few at the expense of the many and that would equalize differences and the general welfare of the American people.

We would then have a government of the people, for the people and by the people, and not a government of the trust for the trust and by the trust as represented by Mark Hanna, Phil Armour and Co.

MOTHER!

There is no word so full of meaning and about which such tender and holy recollections cluster as that of "MOTHER"—she who watched over our helpless infancy and guided our first tottering step. Yet the life of every Expectant Mother is beset with danger and all effort should be made to avoid it.

so assists nature in the change-taking place that the Expectant Mother is enabled to look forward without dread, suffering or gloomy forebodings, to the hour when she experiences the joy of Motherhood. Its use insures safety to the lives of both Mother and Child, and she is found stronger after than before confinement—in short, it "makes Childbirth natural and easy," as so many have said. Don't be persuaded to use anything but

Great Musical Festival At Lexington.

One of the finest concerts ever heard in Kentucky will be that given by the famous orchestra leader, Anton Seidl, (who has just returned from a most successful season in London and on the European continent) at the Lexington Opera House on Tuesday evening October 26th. Mr. Seidl is the premier director of Grand Opera and Grand Orchestral concerts in this country to-day. Every member of his grand orchestra is a musician of international reputation and several of them have been members of Royal Court Orchestras in Europe. Mr. Seidl's Orchestra is accompanied by Mrs. Julia Rive King, soloist. Manager Scott has arranged for special trains at greatly reduced rates for this occasion. All orders by mail or telegram for seats addressed to Manager Scott at Lexington, or Mr. Geo. D. Mitchell at Paris will receive prompt attention.

Gun Club Tournament.

GEORGE WILLIAMS CLAY, of this city, attended the Kentucky Gun Club tournament at Louisville Friday and Saturday, and did some excellent shooting. Friday he tied three contestants—Jake Gay, Roger Smith and W. A. Fawcett—in a match at fifteen live birds, each making a perfect score. The purse of $65, was divided. Saturday Mr. Clay killed 21 out of 25 birds in the contest for the State Championship, which was won by Sam Hutchings, of Louisville, who killed 25 birds. The prize was $310 and a silver cup. Bland Ballard, Louisville, Nath Woodcock, Danville, and A. W. DuBray, of Dayton, O., tied Hutchings, but lost in shooting off the tie. Hutchings killed forty birds straight to win the championship.

Will McNamara's New Enterprise.

WILL McNAMARA (Prof. John Douglass), of this city, who was several times buried alive by Boone, the hypnotist, and who afterwards performed the feat successfully with another hypnotized subject, has organized a new enterprise known as "The Gypsy Maids." The company, which will be headed by "Rosella, the Wandering Gypsy Queen," will give theatrical performances. The company will be managed by Prof. Douglass, and backed financially by a Cincinnati man. The Pettibone Co., of Cincinnati, is making the costumes. The company will start soon for Seattle, and will go from there to Alaska. Prof. Douglass will act as correspondent for the Cincinnati Post while in Alaska.

For Woman's Eyes.

THE woman's edition of the Mt. Sterling Advocate, which appears Friday, will be an excellent paper, filled with excellent articles on a variety of subjects. This edition should prove interesting to the large number of Paris ladies who are members of literary clubs as it will give them the best work of their Mt. Sterling friends. The papers will be on sale at Varden's drug store.

Public Speaking To-day.

DRESS GOODS.

My importations for this Fall and Winter of Ladies' and Children's Dress Goods exceed in cost of investment $10,000 any other purchase I ever made in this one line of goods. With forty years' experience in Dry Goods business in Paris I saw it was to your and my interest to secure these goods under the low tariff, consequently I invested every available dollar I had in goods at low prices. The new Dingley tariff bill has already made and will when set fully at work make all classes of Dry Goods fully double in price what they were under the Wilson or low tariff. I have the advantage of this: My goods were bought when cheap, and it is my intention to hold them down as long as a yard of them lasts. If you want to save money in your purchase this Fall and Winter come and see me and examine my stock and hear prices before you invest elsewhere.

THE DOME OF PICTURES.

In a little house keep I pictures suspended;
It is not a fixed house,
It is round, it is only a few inches from one side to the other;
Yet behold, it has room for all the shows of the world, all the memories!
Here the tableaux of life and here the groupings of death.

—WALT WHITMAN.

Ah, each man bears his Dome of Dreams—
A picture dome
Whereon are painted homely cares,
Defeats and triumphs and despair;
A gallery thronged with wider themes
Than those of Rome.

The pictures of this Dome of Dreams
Are memories.
Young barefoot wandering through the dew,
Through daisied fields when life was new,
By woodland paths, by lilted streams
And blossomed trees.

The picture of a maid at school
With floating hair;
Transfigured in the mist is she
On that dim shore of memory,
Life's dewiness about her, cool
And pure and fair.

The picture of a road that leads
From an old home;
A boy that from a wooded swell
Looks through his tears and waves farewell—
Then down through unknown hills and meads
Afar to roam.

The picture of the long, long way
He traveled far;
Fair fruited hillside slanting south,
Baked hermits upland smit with drought,
And night paths with no gleam of day—
Without a star.

And pictures of wide-sleeping vales
And storm-tossed waves;
Of valleys bathed in noonday peace,
Of sheltered harbors of release,
Blue inlets specked with sunlit sails;
Of open graves.

And pictures of fair islands set
In golden foam;
And pictures of black wrecks upcast
On barren crags by many a blast—
But on! Life paints more pictures yet Upon that dome.

—Sam Walter Foss, in N. Y. Sun.

PERILS OF AUTHORSHIP.

MILDRED'S pretty face wore a new expression as she toyed with her teaspoon and tried to finish her roll and coffee. John had just left for his office. They had been married three months, and the serious aspects of life were for the first time presenting themselves.

"I wish I could do something to help John," thought Mildred, as she gazed abstractedly out of the window. "He has to work so hard," and she gave a little sigh.

"What can I do?" she pondered.
"What can I do?" she asked herself again and again, as with deft touch she straightened and arranged the dainty apartment.

Suddenly her face looked as if a door had opened and flooded it with sunlight.

"I know what I will do; I will write a story. I know I can if I try. People do not have to be so awfully clever to do that. It is a knack, not a talent.
There is Mrs. —, who has made heaps of money; and her stories are only poor trash—all of them. John says so."

Before another hour had passed the outline of a plot was dancing in her excited young brain, and as soon as she could get the time she sat down with pad and sharpened pencil. Then came a pause. "How shall I begin?"

She drew little geometric figures on the margin of her paper as she reflected,
her thoughts seeming to revolve in a circle, returning ever to the place from whence they started. Finally she wrote:

"In a small village on the banks of—"
"Oh, that is so commonplace. No; that will not do." And she tore off the first sheet of her pad and reflected again, then wrote:

"Frank Atwood was the only son of a—"

"No, no; that is too stupid," and the second sheet of the pad went into the waste-paper basket.

She recalled what John had said of the superfluous first three pages, which might with benefit to most stories be eliminated—for John was a journalist and literary critic, and his standards and ideals were just on the measure of her own. So she thought with great deference of what he had said about tedious preambles.

"He is right," she said, with decision.
"It is the personal interest in the characters which we are looking for in reading a story. All that comes before that is tedious superfluity."

"I will dash right on with a letter from the heroine, which will at once explain the situation." So with the confidence which came from feeling herself
at last on the right track, she wrote:

"Dear Frank—I return herewith the letters, which of course I have now no right to keep. I need not tell you what it cost me."

"I have reflected much upon what you said yesterday, but I am at last resolved.
I will not see you again. Any attempt to make me break this resolve will be fruitless. God knows you have only yourself to blame that this marriage has—"

"Please, ma'am," said the cook, coming suddenly in upon the young authoress.
"Please, ma'am, the butcher is here. Will you come and see him and give the order yourself about havin' them chops frenched or whatever it is."

"Oh, what a bore!" sighed Mildred.
"I was just getting into the swing of it." And she left the manuscript upon her desk to be resumed later.

The matter of the chops disposed of,
there were other things requiring attention.

At last, however, she was at her desk again. She read over the letter with which her story opened to see how it sounded. "Really," said she, "I think that starts off very well," and then she took up the broken thread. "Only yourself to blame that this marriage has—"

A violent ringing at the telephone again broke the current. "Hallo," said our young novelist.

"Mildred, is that you?"
"Yes, is it you, Alice?"
"Yes. Mamma does not feel very well and wishes you to take luncheon with us. She has sent the carriage. Be ready to come as soon as it arrives." Obviously no more authorship to-day. So slipping her paper into the desk she departed.

The new purpose of authorship brought a great light and hope into Mildred's life. She pictured to herself his reading her story, possibly reviewing it. "After he has written all kinds of nice things about it I will tell him that I am the author," or—and her heart turned cold and sick—what if he should say it was trash? For, of course, like other good critics, John was seldom pleased. If things were all excellent, what would be the need of critics?
So he had cultivated the art of discovering flaws in what seemed to ordinary readers pure gems. He had developed rather a talent for pillorying people in a single terse phrase, and was much valued for his skill in beating down with the editorial club tender young aspirants who were trying to make themselves heard. This sounds brutal.
But he was only professionally brutal.
In his personal characteristics none
could be more tender or sympathetic.

Mildred knew of this caustic vein and believed it too—as she did also all of John's attributes and gifts—but, she thought, "if he should say any of those dreadful things about me, what should I do? I should never—never—tell him."

And so during the entire day she thought and planned, new intricacies of plot suggesting themselves—vivid and interesting scenes coming before her stimulated imagination.

Her mother urged her remaining and sending for her husband to dine with them. Her secret desire was to return, but she looked at her mother's wistful
face and had not the heart to refuse.
She would stay and send for John.

That gentleman arrived at home at the usual hour. As he put his latchkey into the door he smiled, thinking of the quick car which was listening for it, and of the pretty apparition which would meet him in the hall. "By Jove,"
he thought, "what a lucky fellow I am!"

But the expected figure did not come to meet him. He was conscious of a little chill of disappointment, and still more as he wandered through the rooms and found all silent and deserted.

He rang for the maid.
"Where is your mistress?"
"She is out, sir. There's a note, sir, somewhere," and she looked anxiously about. "Oh, it is on her desk," said she with returning memory, starting to go for it.

"No matter, I will get it," and John turned his impatient steps toward his wife's room. There was no note on the desk, and quite naturally he opened the lid. His eyes were riveted upon the words before him:

"Dear Frank—I return herewith the letters which I have no longer any right to keep. I need not tell you what it costs me—"

He felt as if his blood were turned into ice.

"I have reflected much upon what you said yesterday—"

"Yesterday!"—John felt as if he were going mad. "Yesterday!"—and he had so trusted her! The room had grown black, and a great sledge hammer was beating at his brain, but he read on—
"upon what you said yesterday, but I am at last resolved. I will not see you again. Any attempt to make me break this resolve will be fruitless. God knows you have only yourself to blame that this marriage has—"

John stood for a few moments as if turned into stone, his face blanched, his muscles tense. Then a ray of hope seemed to come to him. "There is no signature; it is not hers." He looked again. How could he doubt it! He knew too well the turn of every letter.
He was alternately livid with rage and choking with grief. His dream of happiness vanished. Something like a curse came from between his closed teeth.

"She loves this man, and she meets him and tells him so, and only yesterday. Oh, it is too horrible! too horrible!" He buried his face in his hands and groaned. "I shall go away; I shall never—"

At that moment the telephone bell rang. He took no notice of
it. "I shall never—"

Again it rang long and loud. What should he do? There was no one else to answer it; he must go. So he said huskily: "Hello!"

Mildred's silvery voice replied:
"John, is that you?"

The situation was shocking. How could he reply?—but—there was no time for reflection. He knew that the central office would share all his confidences through that infernal piece of black walnut and ebony. So he said:

"Yes."
"Why do you not come? Dinner is waiting for you."

How well he knew the pretty inflections of that voice!

"I wish no dinner—I am going away
—good-by."

It might have been the conventional telephonic "good-by," or it might contain a profounder meaning.

The effect at the other end of the line cannot be described. Ten minutes later a cab drove furiously up to the door of the apartment house, and Mildred, with white face and fast-beating heart, rushed into the room, and would have rushed into John's arms if he had let her.

"You are going away," she said,
breathlessly.
"You are a very clever actress," said that gentleman, repulsing her intended embrace.

"A what?" said she, amazed. "John,
what's the—"

"A very clever actress," said he, quite as if she had not spoken, "but hereafter we will have a more perfect understanding, and you need not trouble yourself."

"Why, John," said she, "have you lost your senses?"
"No; on the contrary, I have recovered them. I am no longer a dupe. I was fool enough to think you—"

"John, for God's sake tell me what this means!"
"Oh, Mildred! Mildred!" said he, breaking down utterly. "Why did you not tell me like an honest woman that you loved some one else?"

"John, you know, I—"
"Stop!" said he. "Stop! do not stain your soul with any more falsehood."
"You need not have married me," went on the wretched man. "God knows I wish you had not."

She tried to put her arms about him
as he paced to and fro in rapid strides,
but he pushed her away angrily. "No, no more of that. That has lost its charm."

Mildred burst into tears.
"I never—would—have—believed—"
you would—be—so—so—cruel," sobbed
she. "What have I done?"

"Done?" shouted the exasperated
man. "Done? Why, you have spoiled the life of an honest man, who doted on you, believed in you—like a trusting fool—who would have risked his life on your honesty—"

"Stop," said Mildred, and she gathered herself up to a fuller height than John's eyes had ever before beheld in her. She, too, was angry now.

"If you have any charges to make I demand that they be definite and not in base innuendo. You are very cruel and also very insulting to me. I shall not remain in this house to-night; nor return to it until you have apologized."

And she swept from the room and from John's astonished sight.

A moment later he heard the messenger call, then heard his wife give an order for a cab, then saw her packing a handbag. He intended doing so himself. But somehow having her do them was infinitely harder to bear.

Mildred was very angry. "Not a thing of his," she said to herself as she stripped off her rings and gathered her trinkets. "My purse, too," she thought, and went to the desk to find it. Her husband had been watching for this. He knew she would try to secure that letter.

"Oh," said he, "you are a little too late. You should have thought of that before."

These, to her, unmeaning words, uttered with much concentrated bitterness, made her seriously doubt his sanity. She looked at him curiously. How else could she construe this incomprehensible fury? she pursued. The thought had calmed her resentment.
She went to his side, placed her hand kindly on his arm. "My dear John,"
said she, "will you explain to me what all this means?"

He felt touched, and oh, how he longed to take her to his heart; but that could never be again.

"Will you first explain to me," he answered, trying to be hard and cold;
"explain to me where you were yesterday?"

"Certainly he is mad," she thought,
and she tried to be very calm.

"Ah, yes," he went on. "You can look very innocent, but, woman, look at that!" and with tragic gesture he held up the paper.

Mildred looked at it bewildered; then she read: "Dear Frank." A gleam of light first came into her face, and gradually deepened into an expression of interest and amusement. She understood it all.

John looked to see her crushed, despairing and penitent; and instead he witnessed this unaccustomed, extraordinary change of silence, and laughter—peal after peal of silvery laughter—rang through the rooms. She tried to speak, but could not.

John in his turn began to think that she was mad. At last, with tears running down her cheeks, not from grief
this time, she said:

"Oh, you dear silly—silly thing! Oh, you dear goose—that's my story—and I was going to surprise you—and bring you ever—ever so much money—and now you have gone—and spoiled"—and here she began to cry in earnest. "And —you—have—said—such—cruel—
cruel—"

Her sobs, together with John's great angry, stifled sobs, filled the room. "Oh, my angel, my angel, I have been such a brute. Can you ever forgive me?"—N.
Y. Graphic.

WHY SOLDIERS WERE TOO SHORT

Prince Bismarck Mystified by Criticism of German Troops.

Just at the time when vague reports were beginning to creep abroad that Germany was meditating fresh extension of her frontier at the expense of Holland a Dutch officer of high rank happened to be visiting the court of Berlin and among other spectacles got up to amuse him a review was organized at Potsdam.

"What does your excellency think of our soldiers?" asked Prince Bismarck as one of the regiments came marching past in admirable order.

"They look as if they knew how to fight," replied the visitor, gravely, "but they are not quite tall enough."

The prince looked rather surprised,
but made no answer, and several other regiments filed past in succession, but the Dutchman's verdict upon each was still the same: "Not tall enough."

At length the grenadiers of the guard made their appearance—a magnificent body of veterans, big and stalwart enough to have satisfied even the giant-loving father of Frederick the Great,
but the inexorable critic merely said:
"Fine soldiers, but not tall enough."

Then Prince Bismarck rejoined:
"These grenadiers are the finest men in our whole army; may I ask what your excellency is pleased to mean by saying that they are not tall enough?"

The Dutchman looked him full in the face and replied with significant emphasis: "I mean that we can flood our country 12 feet deep."—London Tri-

FIREPROOF WOOD FOR SHIPS.

Some of the Advantages and Disadvantages Incident to Its Use.

Nonflammable wood, or fireproof
wood, as it is commonly spoken of outside of the circle of experts, has received considerable attention from naval constructors and naval engineers
since the Yaloo river fight in the China-Japan war, and more especially at the recent international congress of naval architects and marine engineers at London, and from the naval authorities of the United States and Japan. The chief of the bureau of ordnance of the United States navy recently made some tests of fireproof wood for the purpose of reporting upon its value for use in making boxes for fixed ammunition.

His report declares that the wood, by being treated with the chemicals used in the fireproof process, lost considerable strength and was difficult to work;
that it also corroded a piece of brass placed between two pieces of it, absorbed moisture to a marked extent and refused to receive paint. This report resulted in instructions by Secretary Long to the board of bureau chiefs to make a thorough investigation of the use of fireproof wood, and the result is predicted that the government will find it advisable to cancel contracts that have been made for fitting vessels under construction with wood thus treated.

The board of bureau chiefs has received several reports already. The Columbian iron works at Baltimore reports that five coats of paint were tried on a single section of fireproof wood,
and it refused to receive any of them.
Of the superintending constructors at the various naval stations one report declares that the tools employed in working the wood have been badly corroded by the chemicals used in the fireproofing treatment. Another makes a report upon the corrosive effect upon the steel and iron in the ship. It is also reported that the wood is exceedingly porous and is apt to make the decks of a ship spongy. An article recently appeared in an English service paper written by "an expert" in which the writer describes the decks of the armored cruiser Brooklyn as of nonflammable wood, and he contrasted their appearance disadvantageously with those of the British men-of-war. He also predicted that the decks would not wear
well and was generally uncomplimentary to nonflammable wood.

Prof. Biles, the well-known English expert, has corrected this statement by declaring the decks of the Brooklyn are not of nonflammable wood, but that they are "thoroughly sound and thoroughly durable" and in every respect up to the mark. The decks of the Brooklyn are of Oregon pine. The gunboat Helena is fitted with a deck made of fireproof wood, and the board of bureau chiefs is to make a close inspection of the material and its effect upon the ship and report upon the advisability of its use in the future. The only large vessel in the navy the decks of which are built with the fireproof wood is the battleship Iowa.

The subject of nonflammable wood was discussed at much length by the international congress of naval architects and marine engineers. Charles E.
Ellis, describing the process of making wood noncombustible, said that it increased the weight from eight to fifteen per cent., and that the arguments for its use rested upon two grounds only—i. e., because it is nonflammable and because, by reason of its low conductivity of heat, it may be employed in substitution for material of greater conduc-tive power. Others spoke favorably of the material. Its chief drawbacks were represented to be its weight and cost.

Prof. Biles suggested that the effect of weather on the wood might be nullified
if the decks were washed with a solution of the chemicals used in the fireproofing process. The system is really an American invention, and so much discussion was given the subject by the congress that the British admiralty has ordered a series of experiments to be made at the Chatham dockyard in order to obtain additional and valuable information of the advantages or disadvantages of the fireproof wood.—N.
Y. Tribune.

An Archaeological Thief.

It would seem that French thieves and housebreakers, when searching for art treasures, are more or less affected by the genius of their spoils. Recently an enterprising but undiscovered personage managed to effect an entry into the Maison Carée, at Nîmes, and to carry off the famous Goudard collection of over 8,000 Roman coins. Instead of rushing off with them to the melting pot, he seems to have wandered about the other interesting relics of antiquity, for which the old provincial city is famous; and, after some hesitation, selected the immediate neighborhood of the Tourmagne—that still unexplained enigma of the past—for a hiding place. The spoiler of the Maison Carée, in his choice, seems to have leaned to the views of those archaeologists who maintain that the Tourmagne was a treasure house in Roman or pre-Roman times. At any rate, he used it as such, for the whole collection was found stored away
there, and has now been once more replaced in its usual and accessible show cases.—N. Y. Times.

The True Scriptural Age of Man.

We have all heard of the well-worn axiom attributed to the psalmist: "The days of a man are three score and ten,"
but in Genesis vi., 3, will be found the following passage: "Yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." This passage seems to have been overlooked,
as I have rarely seen it quoted, although, curiously enough, it exactly corresponds to the theory that man should attain five times the period of reaching his maturity.—Alice Glenesk, in Nineteenth Century.

AMERICAN HUMOR.

The Genuine Article Is Becoming Very Scarce.

America was once famous for its humor. It was a continental humor, an extravagant humor, a humor that delighted in antitheses and contradiction,
but it was genuine and hearty and contained many honest laughs. It is a pertinent question to ask what has become of this humor? Are its makers gone? Have they left it no successors?
So it seems, for, while never before in the history of the republic have there been so many professedly comic publications, and while never before has the joke been as assiduously pursued, never before has the output of real fun been as pitifully meager and small.

The comic papers, although in numbers as the sands of the seashore, contain little else but boiler plate jokes.
The situations never change, new ideas are never introduced, everything is as hopelessly artificial and jejune as the perspective of a Chinese landscape painting. There is no episode except the one of catastrophe; no lovers except those kicked off the premises; no tramps but those fleeing from the pitchfork of some caricatured agriculturist or dodging the assault of an impossible
dog. Bicycling is limited to corpulent middle-aged persons or to shadowy spinsters, or to scorched whose physi-ognomies are borrowed from the rogues' galleries. All negroes are represented as baboons, all Irish as barbarians, all Germans as beer-drinking idiots, and all Hebrews as people intent upon defrauding insurance companies.

We are told that the caricaturists have a new device by means of which they now work by mechanical process. The product indicates that the machine has gone into general use. As the essence of fun is surprise, who can be amused
when you know before a look at the cover, not only the general run of the contents, but the detail as well? The poverty of mental resources shown by our so-called comic weeklies demonstrates that to be funny all the time is not to be funny, and that to be humorous all the time is to be systematically dull. American humor is becoming extinct, and the substitutes for it are the dreariest outputs in the world.

There was American humor, and there have been American humorists.

CHEAP WAY TO GET NEWS.

Economy Shown by Business Men on the Alley "L" Trains.

Even a penny is a large amount of money to people these days. In fact, it has looked quite large to a considerable portion of the traveling public ever since the transportation lines commenced operations, and men have been accustomed to read papers while in transit and abandon them when nearing their getting-off places. This reading the paper on the trains is as much an industry with many men as the daily business at their offices. They buy the papers at the stations where they get on the alley "L" trains, read them hurriedly while riding northward and toss them aside at Twelfth street. They are of the class who stand up between the two last stations in order to crowd to the front door and get off first.

In every car there are always men who do not rush to get off. They play with watch chains, gaze at the readers and vary the monotony by looking out of the windows. They have no papers, but they want them. So when the busy readers rush to the front and leave their dailies behind these thrifty men prowl about under seats and on seats looking for a chance to procure the news at no cost to themselves. The trainmen, of course, are busy on the platforms and have no opportunity to pick up the papers when the owners have abandoned them.

Now, these economists have favorite sheets. They seize the first at hand on the chance of finding one of their favorite publications. Then they hold on grimly, still looking eagerly about. If they locate one they most affect they seize upon it with a look of exultation, drop the other and pass out of the car calmly folding up the paper as if they had been immersed in the news and never noticed how near it was to Congress street. It's cheap and nobody notices them, as they suppose.—Chicago Chronicle.

Camphor Trees in Florida.

The failure of the world's supply of camphor would deprive mankind of a great boon. There is probably no actual danger of such failure, yet the camphor trees of China, Formosa and Japan have been destroyed so rapidly in recent years that the question has been discussed whether they can be replaced.
It would be desirable, if possible, to cultivate them in lands lying nearer to the great centers of civilization, and experiments are said to have shown that the climate of Florida is well suited to their growth. Cultivated in Florida by scientific methods, it is claimed that the life of the trees could be saved, instead of being destroyed, in the process of collecting the precious gum, as has hitherto been the case in the east.—Youth's Companion.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS

INTELLIGENT EFFORT.

It counts as much as money in the improvement of roads.

The farmer should be particularly interested in having good roads, first because he is usually taxed heavily to maintain them—as real estate cannot escape taxation—and secondly for the reason that he has occasion to use them to a greater or less extent in the prosecution of his business. And the last may often outweigh the first in dollars and cents, when is taken into consideration the moving of heavy loads for a considerable distance over poor roads.

Here is a view of the case that should not be lost sight of. It is not those alone who drive for pleasure or business over our highways that should ask for or demand their improved condition. This is for their interest and convenience, it is true, and rightly too,

ROAD NEAR SWIFTWATER, N. H.
(A District Sadly in Need of a Good Road Supervisor.)

but the farmer who has to move his produce to market or place of shipment, or in the daily prosecution of his work needs to use the road, gains or loses in this direction in accordance with their good or bad condition.

Good roads in such cases mean the saving of time, the greater durability of vehicles and the wear of teams.

Now the farmer, to say nothing of the others, can afford to pay a fair or liberal road tax provided he is assured that it will be so expended as to result in a corresponding improved condition of the roads.

Nothing will go so far toward reconciling farmers or others to the paying of what they might term a large highway tax, as to find that it is being faithfully expended, and above all that a certain amount is devoted to improvements of a permanent character each year. This is evidence that cannot be overlooked or refuted, but is an ever present fact, a monument to the skill and faithfulness of the intelligent road-maker. We want just all of this kind of work that can practically be devoted to the purpose.

Here in Vermont one-fifth of the tax for roads is to be put into improvements of a permanent character. This is largely used in cutting down and lengthening the grade of hills, or in the building of stone or macadamized roads. What little of this kind of work that has been done since the new road law went into effect has proven so satisfactory that it makes us wish that the good work could have been commenced many years ago, then we should now have something worth while to show for the expenditure of so much money.

Here where stone is plenty and not too far away it costs from four to five dollars a rod to build a good road, something that should last many years, only requiring a little attention in keeping the ditches open and the covering in order.

Taking the worst pieces of road first, it will soon be found that commendable progress is being made, as these places were always requiring attention and never long in a satisfactory condition.

Good drainage for roads should be sought for, as this is of the first importance. The ditches should be placed well back from the roadbed, so as to prevent undermining or gully.

Hills should be carefully looked after and the grade made as easy as possible. The surface of the road should be somewhat rounded, so that the water may readily pass off at the sides, rather than run along on the wheel tracks, washing away the dirt and forming holes and gullies. The surface should also be kept clear of small stones that are always so troublesome. Passing over the roads once a month for this purpose should be more generally practiced.

Small repairs should always be attended to in season, as in this way large expense can often be saved.

It will pay to go two miles, if it cannot be obtained nearer, to get gravel with which to fill bad places in roads.

In parts of the country where stone is scarce and gravel can be had, good roads can be made by using this material plentifully on the surface. Of course this means that the roadbed is first put in good condition for the gravel. This method is used to some extent at the west, and even here in the east where stone abounds, gravel, where it can be conveniently obtained, is much prized.

It is possible that in the future portable stone-crushing machines will be largely used in road making in the country, by means of which this plentiful material can be put to some useful purposes.

Above all things, it should be the purpose to get the best men possible for the work of road supervision, and having obtained them keep them until others equally good or better can be found to take their places.

In this way, going slowly it may be but surely forward in the right direction, the time will not be far distant when a great improvement in our highways will be apparent all over our land.

—E. R. Towle, in Farm, Field and Fireside.

The United States has not many over 50 sheep for every 100 of population, while Australia has 3,000 to every 100 of population.

CURING KICKING COWS.

An Ounce of Kindness Is Worth a Pound of Pounding.

Much of the trouble caused by kicking cows is caused by bad management on the part of the milker. In our experience there is not one cow in a dozen but which, if kindly treated, will soon dispense with the habit of kicking without severe measures being necessary. It pays to be gentle and quiet in handling the cows, and to let them know that you are their friend and will not harm them. They will soon learn to respect you if you will treat them kindly. It is all well enough for a cow to know and understand that the one who does the milking is the "business manager," but kick for the good reason that the milking process hurts them, says a writer in the National Stockman. There are also occasionally cows that kick from pure meanness. However, these make excellent beef.

The gentle Jerseys are fast taking the place of other breeds on the farm, and the ones we have are real pets, as gentle, quiet and well behaved as need be. We never have any trouble in milking them, but often milk them for the first time in the yard, without even fastening them, though we are well aware that the Jersey has plenty of mettle, any amount of it, when conditions are favorable for its development. Let the dog chase the cows to and from the pasture, and this mettle will soon be apparent, as will be the decrease in the yield of milk.

There is another item in regard to breaking cows to lead. A cow that is kindly treated can usually be caught in the pasture by placing your arm about her neck. If caught in this way they will seldom make any effort to get away. Place a five-ring halter on the cow, as this does not hurt like a rope around the horns or the neck, and most cows will lead easily with a five-ring halter. A good motto for dairymen to put in their hats is this: An ounce of kindness is worth a pound of pounding.

HANDY BAG HOLDER.

The Cut Explains How It Is Made and Put Together.

A correspondent of the Canadian Farmers' Advocate furnishes the following description of a handy bag-holder. The illustration will enable anyone to understand it:

"Take a piece 27 inches long, and from the middle of it cut a piece 15 inches long and one inch deep. Then take a piece of band iron 33 inches long and bend it as shown at B, making C three inches long, D six inches, and E 15 inches long. Make a couple of holes at C and F so that loop may be fastened to A by means of screw nails. This loop projects out in front of A. The back leg is a flat three feet long and three inches wide, and is fastened to A by means of a hinge. The other two legs are each about 31-3 feet long and are attached to the headpiece (A) at an angle of about 45 degrees. This will make it stand firm. In the cut in A, and about two inches from each end, screw a couple of screw nails (G and H), leaving about half an inch protruding. To fasten on the bag, double one side over the iron loop and hook the other side on the screw nails, then move back the slat until the bottom of the bag rests on the floor."

GOOD GARDEN SOIL.

It Is One in Which the Atmosphere Can Circulate Freely.

What is or what is not good garden soil is often a great question. The customer often complains to the nurserymen that, though he planted his trees in the very best soil, yet he had little success. Very few people seem to understand that good soil is one in which the atmosphere can freely circulate. The earth must not allow the air to circulate to such an extent as to lose its moisture, but it must have an abundance of small spaces which will contain small quantities of air before plants will thrive. We sometimes speak of "air plants," but, in truth, all plants are air plants, no matter whether growing on rocks or trees or whether growing in the earth. Air is of far more consequence to the roots than to the leaves. When, therefore, we have a stiff clay earth to deal with, we make a good soil by applying sand, or vegetable matter which when it rots will leave small spaces in which air may be collected. It is for the same reason that we crush hard clods, for a hard clod has no air spaces. When broken to pieces—pulverizing is the technical term—we simply give the chance for atmospheric air to spread throughout the whole mass. For the same reason, what is known as a wet soil is a bad soil, because water drives out the air. There is no air in earth which is water-tight. It has been noted that the use of a hole in the bottom of a flower pot is not so much to allow the escape of water as it is to permit fresher air to flow in the spaces of earth when the water leaves it. In the language of gardening, a good soil is one which is perfectly "aerated."—Meehan's Monthly.

All through the winter the apples should be frequently examined so as to remove any that are rotting.

When the leaves of the gooseberry, grape or currant fall, cuttings can be made from the new growth.

A CHILD'S RECOVERY

From Paralysis and Six Years of Convulsions.

Little Fannie Adams, of Umatilla, Cured of a Dreadful Malady—A Cure of Unusual Interest—A Reporter Investigates.

From the Lake Region, Eustis, Fla.

For some time past the Lake Region has been receiving reports from Umatilla, Fla., of an almost miraculous cure that had been effected in the case of Fannie Adams, a daughter of A. J. Adams, of that place, and last Saturday a representative of this paper made a trip to Umatilla for the purpose of determining the authenticity of the same.

The family live a short distance from the village, where it was found that the people were cognizant of the cure which had been effected, and were rejoicing with the family in their new found happiness. The father, A. J. Adams, is a hard-working honest farmer from east Tennessee, and the family came to Florida four years ago in the hope that a change of climate would be of benefit to their afflicted child. Much of their earnings have gone for doctors, but whose services proved unavailing. The representative was greeted by Mrs. Adams, from whom he gained the story of her great trial.

Fannie, the youngest child, was born in east Tennessee, and was seven years old on the third day of February, 1897. When ten months old she was stricken with paralysis, which affected the entire left side. This stroke of paralysis was followed by convulsions, and from the time little Fannie was ten months old until February, 1897, there was not a single day or a night that she did not have spasms of the most distressing nature. Not a single convulsion, but always three or four, and sometimes as high as ten in one day.

The family was all broken down with care, and Mrs. Adams states that for one year she did not go into her kitchen to superintend her household work. All the fingers of the right hand of the little girl are enlarged and misshapen, caused by her biting her fingers during the fearful suffering. The case baffled the skill of the best physicians, and they were frank to say that they could not determine the cause, or prescribe a remedy to aid the afflicted child.

But what a change now in that household! For little Fannie has recently been cured from her six years of agony, which brings the light of happiness to the faces of the parents.

In January, this year, Mrs. Adams, who had purchased some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for her fourteen year old daughter, determined to try their effect upon little Fannie. After three or four doses, she noted an improvement and she then told the father what she had done. He at once went to the village and bought another box, and up to this time six boxes have been used. The first, pink pills, Mrs. Adams states, were given in January, the latter part, and certainly not earlier than the fifteenth or twentieth, and the child had her last convulsion on February 3d, nearly three months ago. Her general condition has improved in every respect, such as suppression, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks.

In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. ## HER SCOLDING LOCKS.

She Tried to Oblige a Friend But She Got Angry About It.

Some people are absolutely devoid of tact. One of these is a youthful matron who, wishing to make her very dearest friend another young matron—a birthday present, decided on the purchase of a handsome pair of shell side combs.

Nothing could have been more appropriate for the blonde tresses of her friend, and the giver felt much pleased with her selection when she went to call on her and give her the pretty ornaments.

"I thought you would like them," she said, when her friend had admired them and thanked her rapturously, "you will find them so handy to fasten up your locks."

"What do you mean?" asked her friend, in a surprised tone.

"Did you never hear of scolding locks? They are the short ends of your hair that are always flying loose. They bother one so much, but side combs keep them in order, besides being very becoming ornaments."

"So you think I have scolding locks—then I must be a scold. Thanks, awfully, dear, but I do believe I have any combs. Keep them for your own scolding outfit," and the face of the "dearest friend" clouded with anger.

"Very well, just as you like. Good-by, dear," and the donor of the combs snatched them and fled, leaving her friend to stare after a fit of hysterics. And all because she needed a little tact.—Chicago Times-Herald.

How to Make Tea.

More than half the Tea consumed in the United States and Canada is of Japanese growth, and the majority of Americans are, apparently, not understood how to prepare it so as to develop the delicious qualities which it contains. The Japanese Government has appropriated a large fund to aid the Japanese Tea growers and Tea merchants in prosecuting this educational work, and it is hoped that American ladies will be apt students. The main Bureau of the Japanese Tea Guild has issued an official recipe for making Japanese Tea, the translation of which is as follows:

First.—Use a small, dry and thoroughly clean porcelain teapot.

Second.—Put in one teaspoonful of tea leaves for each cup of tea desired.

Third.—When using Japanese teas, pour on the required quantity of fresh boiled water, and let stand with closed lid from 2 to 3 minutes. Never boil the leaves. In order to retain the natural flavor, Japanese tea leaves should be kept in tight can or jar, free from moisture.

Note.—To thoroughly enjoy the natural, delicate and sweet flavor of Japanese Teas, neither sugar nor cream should be used.

Every Saturday Tourist Sleeping Car

Route to California.

Every Saturday night Midland Route tourist cars en route to Colorado, Utah and California will leave the Chicago Union Passenger Station at 10 o'clock, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway at 10 o'clock, running over the Chicago and Omaha Short Line to Omaha, thence via Lincoln, Neb., Colorado Springs and Leadville, Colo., Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, Reno, Nevada, and Sacramento, Cal., arriving at San Francisco at 8:45 p. m. Wednesday.

These popular every Saturday California excursions for both first and second-class passengers (not foreign emigrants) are personally conducted by intelligent, competent and courteous "conductors" who will attend to the wants of all passengers en route. This is an entirely new feature of tourist car service and will be greatly appreciated by families or parties of friends traveling together, or by ladies traveling alone. Particular attention is paid to the care of children who usually get weary on a long journey.

Remember that the Midland Route Tourist Cars are sleeping cars and are supplied with all the necessities necessary to make the journey comfortable and pleasant, and the sleeping berth rate is but $6.00 (for two persons) from Chicago to California.

Ask the nearest ticket agent for a tourist car "folder," giving complete information about the Midland Route, or address "Eastern Manager Midland Route," No. 95 Adams street, Chicago, Ill., or Geo. H. Heaford, General Passenger Agent, 410 Old Colony Building, Chicago.

TAKING CARE OF HIMSELF.

Jack Was Making Money in Ways of His Own Choosing.

"Why don't you give that son of yours a chance?" asked one business veteran of another. "He must inherit some of your superior business qualities and the time will come when you must have some one to look after your affairs. He can't manage them without the necessary training."

"Don't you suppose that I have canvassed the whole situation? I have let that boy handle a small fortune, and the results have been so unsatisfactory that I have given him formal notice to look out for himself."

"But he seems to have plenty of money."

"That's another thing I don't like. I have cut off his allowance, yet he lives well and never enters a complaint. Last spring I thought I would have to put up the office blinds for want of ready cash. My collaterals were not available and creditors were pushing me. The boy walked into the office one afternoon when I was in the throes of despair, said: 'Things lookin' blue, governor?'

Laid down a certified check for $20,000 and walked out. I owe him that yet, but am holding it back till I can see that he needs it. When I gave him money to buy wheat and told him how the market was liable to go, he ignored my advice and bought millions of eggs; right in the midst of hot weather, mind you. On learning where they were stored I notified the health department and requested some of those in the vicinity to bring proceedings when the nuisance asserted itself. I learned incidentally afterward that he had a patent process for preserving eggs and cleared up a big pot of money. Wheat hadn't gone the way I predicted, but it was his business to do as I told him. Recently he made $15,000 at some shooting game. I don't know just what it was, but one of his friends said that Jack had taken a long shot at a horse and won. I hope the rascal had to pay for the horse."—Detroit Free Press.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Miss Sachner, of Columbus, O., to Ailing Women.

To all women who are ill:—It affords me great pleasure to tell you of the benefit I have derived from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude for the boon given to suffering women in that excellent remedy. Before taking the Compound I was thin, nervous, I was troubled with leucorrhoea, and my menstrual periods were very irregular. I tried three physicians and gradually grew worse. About a year ago I was advised by a friend to try Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and Vegetable Compound, which I did. After using three bottles of the Vegetable Compound and one package of Sanative Wash, I am now enjoying better health than I ever did, and attribute the same to your wonderful remedies. I cannot find words to express what a Godsend they have been to me.

Whenever I begin to feel nervous and ill, I know I have a never-failing physician at hand. It would afford me pleasure to know that my words had directed some suffering sister to health and strength through those most excellent remedies.—MISS MAY SACHNER, 348 1/2 E. Rich St., Columbus, O.

He Raised the Wind.

The ship had lain becalmed in a tropical sea for three days. Not a breath of air stirred the mirror-like surface of the sea or the limp sails that hung from the yards like drapery carved in stone. The captain resolved to wait no longer. He piped up all hands on deck, and requested the passengers to also come forward. "I must ask all of you," he said, "to give me every match you have." (Wonderingly the passengers and crew obeyed.) The captain carefully arranged the matches in his hand as each man handed him his store, until all had been collected. Then he threw them all overboard but one, drew a cigar from his pocket, and, striking the solitary match on the mainmast, endeavored to light it. In an instant a furious gale swept over the deck, extinguished the match, and filled the sails, and the good ship Mary Ann sped through the waves on her course.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Inherited Blood Taint.

Here is a case of inherited blood taint which resulted in what threatened to be a complete wreck of an innocent young life. The most serious feature of being afflicted with a blood disease is the fact that innocent posterity must suffer. The man or woman with the slightest taint in the blood forces the undesirable legacy of impurity upon their children whose veins flow with the impure inheritance which handicaps them in the race of life.

No child who has a trace of bad blood can be healthy or strong, and those predisposed to Scrofula are liable to a great deal of sickness, because their constitutions are weak and cannot withstand the many dangers which beset the path of childhood. Medical statistics show that a majority of lung troubles result directly from Scrofula, so that a child afflicted with this disease is likely to fall a victim to dreaded consumption.

Mr. W. A. Clayton, of Addie, N. C., believes S.S.S. is the only blood remedy which can have any effect whatever upon obstinate cases. He says:

"My three-year-old boy had the worst case of Scrofula I ever heard of. He was given many blood remedies without relief, and treated by the best doctors. He seemed to get worse all the while, however, and the disease finally resulted in curvature of the spine, making him utterly helpless.

MR. W. A. CLAYTON.

"The bad sores on his neck increased in size, and were a source of constant pain. He was in this pitiful condition for two years, when some one recommended S.S.S., stating that it had cured some of the worst cases of blood diseases. As soon as his system was under the effect of the medicine, the sores began to get better, and in eight days were completely healed. Before long he could walk on crutches, and was improving every day. In three months he threw aside his crutches, for he had no further use for them; the dreadful disease had been eliminated entirely from his system, and he was restored to perfect health. The cure was a permanent one, as no sign of the disease has returned for ten years."

S.S.S. is a real blood remedy, and promptly reaches all deep-seated and obstinate blood diseases, it matters not what other treatment has failed. It is the only remedy which acts on the correct principle of forcing the disease from the system and getting rid of it permanently.

S. S. S. is a sure cure for Scrofula, Cancer, Catarrh, Eczema, Rheumatism, Tetters, and all other blood diseases. It is

HERMIT OF ANTRIM.

AN EDUCATED MAN'S SOLITARY EXISTENCE IN IRISH CAVES.

There is a Mystery About Him, and No One Can Tell Whence He Came—His Food Consists of Potatoes Only, but He Cooks Them Before Eating.

There are portions of the north of Ireland where nature assumes a grand and wild aspect. On the coast of Antrim there is no armistice in the furious battle that, since the first ages of the terrestrial globe, was engaged between the waves and the rocks. Columns of basalt, like gigantic sentinels, stand on guard to resist the invasion of the ocean, and the profound excavations made under the granite rocks that protect this portion of the soil of La Verte Erin prove that the waves must have frequently made most vigorous onslaughts and only retired after they had mined a land which they could not conquer.

It is not difficult to imagine that this majestic and desolate site should have seduced one of the vanquished ones in life, one who had absolutely decided to separate himself from the society of man. The real hermits are becoming more and more rare—indeed, it was believed that they had completely disappeared—but if a vocation for that singularly abandoned profession could still be felt by any one it might be in the presence of the marvelous spectacle of that sea whose waves never subside, of those grottoes whose pillars and vaults possess a power which the art of the architect can never equal. Nature herself seems to have created in those rocks a refuge for the shipwrecked, for the proscribed and perhaps also for those who despise the vanities of life.

About ten years ago a mysterious individual made his home in the grottoes of the coast of Antrim. The approach of any human being seemed to inspire him with an invincible repugnance. As soon as the cavern which he had selected for his refuge was discovered by the fishermen of the neighborhood he immediately disappeared and took up his quarters 20 or 30 kilometers farther on in another retreat which appeared more inaccessible. For a few months his domicile was in an old abandoned mine, the principal gallery of which advanced under the ground to the distance of about five kilometers, but as the inhabitants of the nearest village had long before carried away the beams that sustained the vault to convert them into firewood the hermit was obliged to quit that dangerous refuge, where he was constantly exposed to the danger of being buried alive. So he installed himself in a grotto, the access to which was more easily discovered, but it was less obscure, less humid and less liable to cave in. There he flattered himself that he would find at least some of the conditions of existence that belonged to the men of the caverns. But it was in vain that he hoped to return to the life of the first ages of prehistoric humanity. He was obliged to pay tribute to the exigencies of civilization and to manifest less repugnance for all contact with his fellow beings.

One day he found an empty barrel that the tempest had tossed upon the shore, and he could not resist the temptation of bringing it home to serve as a bed. Some indiscreet persons, taking advantage of his absence to visit his apartments, discovered that he had a pot for cooking his food. Where did that cooking utensil come from? Was it also a piece of wreckage rolled up upon the sand by the furious waves, or was it the last souvenir of civilized life carried away by the anchorite who, while endeavoring to return to the conditions of existence that belonged to prehistoric times, could not abandon the habit of cooking his food?

That is a question which has never been answered, and it is also impossible to find out where he gets the potatoes upon which he lives. Did they come from the discreet charity of the poor fishermen of the neighborhood, who at the proper time renewed his provisions, or in separating himself from the world did he make arrangements for the transportation of his modest provisions? That is also a mystery which has never been fathomed. One point, however, is certain, and that is that the hermit determined to live upon potatoes alone. One day a sailor offered him half of his dinner. The hermit pretended to be glad to accept the gift, but he never touched the food. In the absence of the kind hearted sailor he tossed it into the sea. Apparently he also vowed that he would never enter a house and never touch a piece of money. He kept his resolutions. Nothing could ever induce him to cross the threshold of any one of the little houses of the fishermen, who began to have a sort of affection for him, and never once was he known to beg. The only liberality that he would accept and that he solicited from the munificence of strangers was a match to light the firewood gathered for cooking his potatoes.

The Rev. J. H. Bernard endeavored to lift the veil that hid the origin and antecedents of this mysterious personage. The man of the caverns of Antrim endeavors in vain to live the life of a savage. It has been recognized by more than one sign that he has received a good education. From time to time he read to the fishermen some passages from the Bible, but he never comments upon them. There is no evidence going to prove that the man has any particular form of insanity beyond, perhaps, the harmless one of the love of solitude. He is always clean and neat in appearance and seems to be sound and vigorous in body. He speaks with an accent, so that it is impossible to fix the locality from which he came. He seldom smiles, but he doesn't look sad. On the contrary, he has resigned and perfectly satisfied. Who he is, and why he lives such an extraordinary life, no one can tell.—London Figaro.

THE OLD FLYBOOK.

It Is Dearer to the Angler Than Any Other Possession.

Is there anything closer to an angler's heart than his flybook? I know of a case where a burglar, among other things, took a flybook. He was arrested and speedily convicted and imprisoned. He cleared things out pretty well in the house, but the owner seemed to care for nothing about the missing fur coats, sealskin sacks, silverware and other valuable Lures and Pennants, but he did bewail the loss of his book of flies. The other things he could buy again, but to get together such an assortment of valuable flies seemed to him an impossible thing. He had been years collecting them, picking up odd ones here and there, until, for quality and variety, his book could not be excelled.

It was a fly storehouse, as it were. No matter where he intended fishing, or whether for trout, bass or salmon, he could always find a choice assortment to draw from with which to fill up a supplementary book.

Although it was some time ago he yet bewails the loss of that flybook. Many have been the efforts to get track of it, but all in vain. He has gone to the expense of sending to the prison in a distant city and endeavoring to prevail upon the convict to divulge the hiding place of the book, but without success. A persistent search of the pawnshops and periodical advertising have produced no better results.

There were flies in that book for trout and salmon in Irish waters, flies for the salmon and trout of the Scotch lakes and the English streams and flies for the salmon of Norway. The favorites from Maine to California and from one end of Canada to another were collected in that wallet—anything and everything, from the feather down midge with cobweb gut to the lordly salmon fly, absolutely irresistible to the lurking salmon deep down in the icy pools of the Cascadepia.

There were flies in that book on which famous bass, trout and salmon had been hooked, each fly carrying with it memories of battles fought from canoes among the rushing, swirling waters.—Forest and Stream.

MOONSHINER IN REAL LIFE.

Quite Different From His Confreere as Seen on the Stage.

The Kentucky moonshiner in real life does not resemble his counterpart, described in novels and impersonated on the stage, in the least. He does not wear top boots and a slouch hat. As a rule he is too poor to possess the former, and he is more apt to go barefoot or to amble along in a pair of worn-out brogans than to wear top boots. His hat is usually a torn straw "Jimmy" and his clothes are yellow and faded with age. Regularly, on days when the grand jury meets in Louisville, a dozen or more of the moonshiners are presented for indictment. They present a woebegone appearance as they pass along the streets in charge of the marshal. In their own poor homes in the mountains they are hospitable, but of the stranger ever suspicious. The latter may make his bed in the one room where the entire family sleeps, but his request for a taste of liquor brings forth a statement that none is to be had this side of "the store." At the same time a still may be in operation within ten feet of his whereabouts.

"The store" represents to the mountaineer all civilization. On winter mornings he will tramp to it through cold and snow to sell a few stiff rabbits and swap yarns not overbrilliant. One of the mountaineer's chief sources of income is his honey, and this finds ready sale at "the store." The moonshiner seldom receives money in pay for his wares, but is paid in a bit of bright calico for his wife or a shoulder of bacon. If he can add to this a few pipefuls of tobacco, he is well satisfied with the results of his labors.—New York Commercial.

What Typhoid Fever Costs.

A correspondent of the Washington Post gives the following appalling typhoid statistics: Every year in the United States 400,000 people are sick with typhoid fever. Forty thousand of them die. They are sick 28 days on an average out of every 365 days. Thus we have 11,200,000 days of sickness from this disease.

Every case of this sickness means one month, generally two months, of idleness. If the wages of the patient are only 50 cents a day, there is a loss of $15 a month. Generally this sickness means a loss of wages in two months' time of $60 or $80. The average loss of wages for six weeks would be $50. Add to this the doctor's bill, which is anywhere from $60 to $100—we will say $60. If the patient lives in the city and has a trained nurse for only three weeks, there is another $45. Ten dollars for the prepared food, ice, milk, etc., brings this moderate bill up to $165. Multiply this by the number of people sick, and we can see every year in the United States $66,000,000 lost to patients by the inroads of this one disease.

Looking Backward.

"You must feel very happy in this lovely cottage you call your own." "How can I when I think of my family that owned an estate of thousands of acres, with a castle and a whole regiment of servants?" "Why, when did they lose it?" "During the eleventh century."—Brooklyn Life.

Stockport, England, boasts one of the largest Sunday schools in the world. The total number of scholars at present on the books is no fewer than 4,834, while there are 238 male and 195 female teachers—a grand army of over 5,000.

It has been estimated that over 2,000,000 people are employed in the manufacture of shoes and that about 1,000,000 are employed in the shoe trade.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passing. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effect following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet both sent free by mail. Mention The Paris (Ky.) News and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer. (25p-1mo)
